Lab Content:

Objective: Students will demonstrate through their photographs a knowledge of historical and contemporary documentary photographers.

Using the book: "A World History of Photography" By Naomi Rosenblum, which provides solid historical perspective, students will breakout into in small discussion groups.

Objective: Create a portfolio of documentary photographs.

1. Students will work in the computer and printing lab where they will import their photos from the camera's memory card onto their personal hard drives.
2. They will separate those photographs into collections using digital software to sort those photographs into several projects.
3. Those photographs will be prioritized into groupings using a hierarchy of most too least successful.
4. Students will meet with the instructor who will further prioritize those photographs.
5. Upon further editing students will place their strongest photos on the server for a class critique for group feedback.

Objective: Students will understand the significance and adherence to truth in this age of digital manipulation.

1. Each student will weigh the comments of the class and instructor to make decisions about their projects.
2. After committing to the project, students will continue it's development to it's completion.

Objective: Students will critically analyze the work of their peers, and the work of professional photographers.

1. Students will interact in the lab session, discussing their project and those of professional photographers that they discover on the web.
2. Photos will be exported to the server for printing proofs. They will be placed on the viewing board and the instructor will guide them in the digital editing process, suggesting:
 - Cropping and aspect ratio management.
 - Fine tuning of global adjustments, color balance, contrast and density for black and white images.
 - Students will make necessary changes and print the second, third and possibly fourth proofs.
 - Final prints will be made, trimmed and museum mounted using professional mat board and signed.
