DESCRIPTION

This one-hour session serves as a mid-semester check-in for the Girls Who Code club members and their ongoing projects. The event will provide an overview of full stack development while giving students a chance to receive guidance and collaborate on their projects. Taking place the day before Halloween, the session will also offer a chance to bring some seasonal fun into the meeting.

Rationale for Providing Pizza and Juice:

Celebrating Progress and Boosting Morale: This session is a key milestone for club members as they assess their progress mid-semester. Providing pizza and juice adds an element of celebration, motivating students to continue their hard work on projects. The timing, right before Halloween, makes it a festive occasion, and food helps set a lighthearted tone.

Encouraging Attendance and Participation: Given that this meeting falls during a busy time for students (mid-semester and the day before Halloween), pizza and juice will serve as a small incentive to encourage higher attendance. It ensures that students prioritize the session, knowing they'll be treated to some refreshments.

Building a Sense of Community: Sharing food, even for just one hour, can foster a stronger sense of camaraderie within the club. It allows students to relax a bit while discussing their projects, facilitating communication and collaboration in a more comfortable environment.

Keeping It Short and Simple: Since the session is only an hour long, pizza and juice are ideal snacks that are easy to serve and eat quickly. This ensures the meeting stays focused, while giving participants a small refreshment break without taking too much time away from the session's objectives.

Conclusion: Providing pizza and juice at this short but important mid-semester check-in will create a welcoming atmosphere, promote attendance, and allow the club members to celebrate their progress so far while remaining focused on their projects. The timing right before Halloween adds a fun, seasonal touch to the event.
